

Abstract

Nonflake coated coloring pigment and method for the production and use thereof

The invention relates to a nonflake coated coloring pigment which consists of an inorganic or organic, amorphous or partially crystalline material and which is provided with at least one coating, where each layer comprises at least one cured melamine-formaldehyde resin or consists of one such resin. The pigment is particularly readily suitable for producing cosmetic products. It confers a pleasant skin sensation to the user of the cosmetic products.